Historical note

Starting in 1970, meetings of the Chicago City Council were recorded onto audiotape and held by the Office of the City Clerk. This method of recording lasted until 2010 when, for a brief two-year period, City Council meetings were recorded onto Compact Disk. Starting in 2012 City Council meetings have been available as live streaming video and stored as archival video recordings on the City Clerk's web site. The recordings cited in this finding aid refer only to the City Council audio recordings which were digitized in 2024 (1970-2010) from the original analog sources as well as those recorded onto Compact Disk (2010-2012).

The Chicago City Council Audio Recordings span over 40 years of Chicago mayoral administrations. In 1970, at the time the recordings begin, Mayor Richard J. Daley was serving the final year of his fourth term (1967-1971). He would die in office in 1976, having been elected to a sixth term in the year prior. Michael A. Bilandic was appointed acting mayor by the City Council to finish serving Mayor Daley's final term and he would be elected to a second term in 1977. In 1979 Jane Byrne would beat Bilandic and others to become Chicago's first female mayor (and 50th overall). She served one term before losing to Harold Washington in 1983.

Harold Washington was Chicago's first African American mayor. He was elected twice before dying in office during his second term in 1987. David Duvall Orr served as interim mayor for one week following the death of Mayor Washington before the City Council elected Eugene Sawyer to serve as acting mayor to finish out Washington's term.

In 1989 Richard M. Daley defeated Sawyer and others and served six consecutive terms (1987-2011) as mayor of Chicago. After Daley retired from office Rahm Emanuel was elected twice, serving as Chicago's mayor from 2011-2019. The pivot to streaming video as the method for recording and preserving City Council meetings started in the second year of Mayor Emanuel's first term and has continued since then.

Scope and Contents note

The first audio recording of a City Council meeting was made on May 27, 1970. The last was made on January 19, 2012. Not every City Council meeting during that time span was recorded. The years with the least number of extant recordings available are 1977-1978. Meetings on May 2, and May 7, 1983, which historians consider the beginning of the "Council Wars" era of the Chicago City Council after Harold Washington's mayoral election, were not recorded but were professionally transcribed by McGuire's Reporting Service, Chicago. The transcriptions are available digitally—see the Related Materials section below.

Note that the meetings that appear in the container list are only those for which a recording is available. City Council meetings that took place between 1970 and 2012 for which there are no recordings are not listed.

The Notes section included in the container list contains information regarding notable legislation and related discussions that happened during the meetings as well as any special visitors honored. It is not a comprehensive guide to what happened during the City Council meetings. See the Related Materials section for a more comprehensive list of digitized supporting resources for locating legislative actions within the time frame of the audio recordings.

The project to digitize the analog audio recordings of the Chicago City Council from 1970-2010 was made possible through the generosity of the Council on Library and Information Resources who awarded the Office of the City Clerk, City of Chicago a Recordings at Risk grant in 2024.
